Even with peace declared the game will still be sagging unless it is handled in a clean, fair and dignified way from the top.

There are still enough sportsmen left in the game to save it if they will only take up an aggressive campaign for higher standards in conducting the sport. But scenes around the Waldorf last week were sufficient to show that the higher standard desired was still absent and that experience had taught

Barney Dreyfus made a wise selection in naming Jimmy Callahan to succeed Fred Clarke, for it is much wiser to pick an experienced leader than to start out a managerial debutante.

Callahan made his mistakes with the White Sox, but all that time he was to Canadians began a strong of- learning something. Through this experience he should be a better leader at Pittsburgh than he ever was in Chicago.

In the same way Charley Herzog will be a much more valuable man for cincinnati than he was last year or the year before.
